

School volunteering and service learning with Habitat for Humanity

For more than 15 years, Habitat has tailor-made school volunteer activities throughout the world, involving more than 50 schools and universities from Europe and the Middle East. Habitat for Humanity's service learning approach fits perfectly with the schools' approach on international development and provides a unique way to integrate the Creativity, Action, Service requirements.

School teams can join even if they have no prior experience in construction work or with volunteering in general. They will work alongside future homeowners and local communities. Through this experience they can gain a deeper knowledge and understanding for other cultures, countries and the effects of housing poverty in different parts of the world.

"Volunteering with Habitat for Humanity clearly gives the students the opportunity to experience the strong ideals in which the American School of Milan strives for: to become inquirers, communicators, open-minded, caring, risk takers, and reflective."

— Paul Eckhardt, a teacher at the American School of Milan

The process

Along with Habitat coordinator you will work together on creating tailor made trip which will result into meaningful service learning experience.

We ask for a specific chaperone team leader from your school who can act as the liaison for the student volunteers and your school's needs and concerns.

Habitat for Humanity will provide training for the identified chaperone team leader and orientation resources for all the student participants.

Together we establish dates, locations and volunteer numbers and organize and plan every aspect of the volunteer experience, including accommodation, in-country transportation, food, insurance and cultural activities. We have all the tools needed on site, and we will take care of all safety orientation and safety equipment.
