The housing need in Bangladesh

While Bangladesh has made remarkable progress in poverty reduction, one in four people is still living in poverty, according to the World Bank group. The capital Dhaka is the most crowded city in the world with 41,000 people per square kilometer, based on a Demographia survey in 2019. People move to urban centers in search of work or after losing their homes and livelihoods following disasters fueled by climate change. UNICEF estimates there are 4 million slum dwellers in Dhaka. Three in four slum households live in one room, mostly in dwellings made of poor quality construction materials. They often lack access to clean water, safe sanitation and waste management. Slum dwellers face eviction threats as well as disaster risks from living in low-lying areas.

How Habitat addresses the need

Decent, affordable housing

Future homeowners build core houses comprising one room, a toilet and a veranda with the option of expanding their living space in the future. Habitat Bangladesh provides technical support to families and training to construction workers in building or renovating homes.

Disaster response and mitigation

Habitat helps disaster-affected families through the distribution of emergency shelter kits and transitional housing in the initial phase and provides technical support when reconstruction takes place. Since 2007, Habitat has enabled more than 5,000 families to rebuild their homes and lives and to better prepare for future disasters.

Urban development and advocacy

With funding from the Australian government, Habitat had improved the lives of about 9,000 slum dwellers in Dhaka city in its first urban project that began in 2012. Habitat Bangladesh also engages multi-sector partners through urban forums and dialogues organized since 2014. In April 2019, Habitat Bangladesh and other members of a multi-sector steering committee launched the Bangladesh Housing Forum — a collaboration platform for local housing stakeholders — at a national seminar in Dhaka. The committee also issued a seven-point declaration to address housing and land issues in Bangladesh.

Volunteer engagement

While Habitat Bangladesh is currently not hosting Global Village builds, local volunteers continue to lend their support. Through the annual Habitat Young Leaders Build, young people raise awareness and funds and speak up for housing needs. A total of 456 individuals put in almost 4,660 volunteer hours in the fiscal year ended June 30, 2019.
